Barony of Storvik: Performers' Revel—January 27

Come to the long-hallowed Performers' Revel that will take place in its traditional location in the tasty halls of Caer Bear. The theme of the event is as it has always been - this is a revel of performers, by performers and for performers, and as such, all who attend must contribute one performance for the delight of your fellows. But fear not! "Performance" casts a wide net. There will be singing and dancing and poetry and story-telling and the playing of instruments and jokery and juggling and dramatic presentations and anything else that you can make a case for as a performance art! Novice performers are especially welcome!

Site Info: Caer Bear (the home of Fevronia and Igor), 2204 Amber Meadows Dr., Bowie MD 20716. The revel will begin at noon and continue on until our strength runs out. The site is most exceeding wet and the Maryland drinking age is 21.

Food: Baron Igor will conduct his annual demonstration of cooking as a performing art.

Cost: The cost of the feast is $12. Reservations MUST be made in advance - none will be taken at the door. Checks should be made to the Barony of Storvik/SCA Inc.

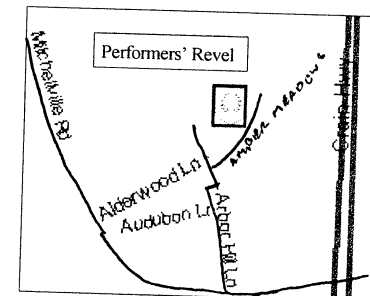

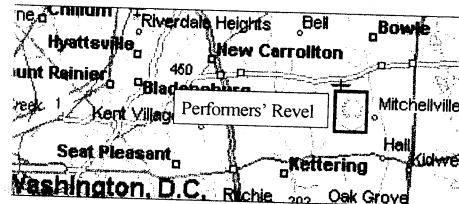

Children: Since small children may find it tedious to sit quietly for performances, parents may wish to make appropriate arrangements.

Reservations should be sent to the autocrat.

Autocrat: Baroness Fevronia Murometsa (Kathleen Sobansky), 2204 Amber Meadows Dr., Bowie, MD 20716. For questions and further information call the autocrat at (301) 390-4428 or via email: owlharp@juno.com.

"Writing on Hands: Memory and Knowledge in Early Modern Europe" Exhibition

From the earliest surviving figurative imagery to the present day, depictions of the hand symbolize human or divine action, power, creativity, intelligence, & manual skill. An original exhibition, WRITING ON HANDS: Memory and Knowledge in Early Modern Europe, explores the use & importance of these images in codifying and extending knowledge—from the mathematical and musical to the astrological & spiritual realms—in 15th- through 17th-century Europe. WRITING ON HANDS examines representations of the hand independent of the body, as figures of both generic and individual human identity. This exhibit opens December 13 at The Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, DC, and closes on March 4, 2001. The curator of the exhibition is Dr. Claire Richter Sherman, author of Imaging Aristotle: Verbal and Visual Representation in Fourteenth-Century France.

Dr. Sherman has assembled prints, manuscripts, and printed books from the 11th through the 17th centuries to examine woodcuts, engravings & drawings featuring representations of the hand inscribed with, or surrounded by, lines, letters, words, symbols and numbers to support the thesis that visual representation plays a vital role in cognitive processes. Organized according to theme, more than 80 works in the exhibition embrace such fields as anatomy, religion, philosophy, psychology, music theory, mathematics, literature, emblematics, & the occult. While referring to relevant medieval traditions, the exhibition's time frame—1466 to 1700—shows how, in conjunction with new print technology, major currents of thought, such as humanism, the Reformation, & the scientific revolution, affected representations of the inscribed hand. The earliest works of authors, like the Venerable Bede, Peter of Rosenheim & Hugo Spechtshart, though known originally in manuscript form, achieved wider influence in printed formats. The illustrated book served to disseminate widely all types of established knowledge, old and new, rational and irrational. The subsequent development of accompanying visual imagery underscores the lasting importance of pictorial representation in cognitive processes.

Reading the Writing on Hands, introduces the topic's universal associations. Mentor, Map, Metaphor explores the hand as a distinctively generic and individual human trait.

Medical imagery then explores the material qualities of the hand. The Handiwork of the Creator considers anatomical prints & book illustrations of the body as evidence of design by a supreme divine or natural authority (The Noblest Creation) and the hand as specific evidence of such intent in The Instrument of Instruments.

"Writing on Hands: Memory and Knowledge in Early Modern Europe" Exhibition (Continued)

Messengers of the World examines the connections between the hand, brain, senses, and memory. Knowledge on Hand discusses the hand as a teaching & learning device. Manipulating Time demonstrates how the revival of an ancient system of coded finger gestures that enables counting to a million became associated with reckoning of secular and sacred operations, including computing the liturgical calendar. Related to the calculating hand, Steps to Singing surveys the so-called Guidonian hand as a popular method to learn and teach basic principles of solmization and music theory. Companion of Eloquence investigates the appearance in the 17th century of visual representations of coded gestures designed for rhetorical and dramatic expression, as well as systems of fingerspelling for teaching the deaf.

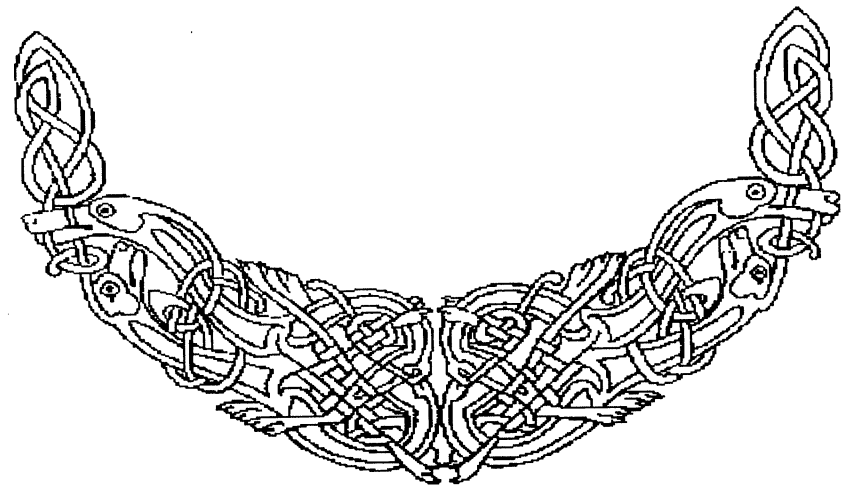

In the exhibition's final section, imagery of Guiding Hands from the early 16th through the 17th century functions as a site of meditation and reflection.

Her Excellency's Message

Johanna von Sudeborn, Baroness of Storvik does send warm and cheerful Greetings to the people of Storvik and her friends

The winter Solstice is upon us as I write, and the first snow of winter has just fallen. Now the days will grow longer, but to pass these winter days, we have many things to happily anticipate.

Yule Revel has become a larger event this year. Though we still have many cold months ahead, our fighters will prepare for the spring fighting. Sir Thorbrandr has called for a War Practice and we are happy to host it, on the same site & day as Yule Revel. The fighting will begin at 11am. If the weather doesn't cooperate, then we shall move the fighting inside, at least until it is time to set up the hall for the Revel. As always, I am happy to taste-test the offerings for the dessert tables.

The next weekend we travel to Kingdom Twelfth Night. Should some need assistance with preparation or travel to the event - call on me. I will be happy to help.

Mistress Fevronia & Master Igor will host the Performer's Revel at the end of January. Then comes Kingdom University - with the feast prepared by MacGregor & company! - the first of February. Get your reservations in early for both of these!

As you see, Storvik has lots of activities and events planned for the upcoming months. Please join us in our planning at the Barony meetings - the second Sunday of each month.

Until we meet again, keep you and yours safe, and have a joyous holiday

Barony of Windmaster's Hill / Atlantia—January 13: Kingdom Twelfth Night

Come join us in the Barony of Windmaster's Hill for a day of merriment and mystery as we celebrate Twelfth Night in the grand tradition of a masqued ball. The theme of the event is period costume. Throughout much of the time period, gentles wore "fancy dress", period dress accentuated by costume accessories such as masks, paints, furs, headdresses, etc. Most people did not make clothing that could only be worn once in a lifetime; instead, they focused on accessories to make their fancy clothes take on the "life" of an actual costume. Later in period, gentles actually did make clothing "stylized" to a certain time period, e.g. someone coming as the goddess Minerva who lived in 1400's France would not make an actual Roman dress; rather, they would use a dress of their own period & modify it using Roman elements of style, color and pattern. To assist in creating the right atmosphere, we encourage everyone to make some attempt at masquerade, whether it be simple face paints or elaborate headpieces. Come as animals, elements, seasons, mythic gods, goddesses or heroes, literary figures (within the required time frame, of course)...the only limit is your imagination and creativity.

Children's Activities: There will be scheduled children's activities from noon to 6:30pm. An unsupervised TV/video room will be available from 6pm to 11pm.
